ROGER CARAS, an ABC news correspondent who specializes in environmental and wildlife issues, answers students questions in the journalism school library Thursday.

Wildlife reporter praises TV, radio

By Tim Huneck
Kaimin Editor

The broadcast media can reach people far-removed from wildlife and convince them of its worth to society, a major television news correspondent said Thursday.

Speaking to a crowd of about 200 in the Underground Lecture Hall, Roger Caras, ABC News environmental reporter, said television and radio, more than other media, can educate people living in urban areas about wildlife they probably will never encounter.

"I know of no single media that can, with certainty, reach more people and go into more homes than television and radio," Caras said. "It can be an enormously potent force for good. People won't read a book, but they will watch three or four minutes on TV for two consecutive nights."

Caras, who showed a variety of examples of reports he has done for "ABC News" and ABC's news magazine, "20-20," added that television has many techniques to bring wildlife into the home. These techniques include general education stories about the nature of animals, "hard core" conservation stories about clashes between development and nature and "popcorn salesmanship," a method used to hook viewers on wildlife, he said.

In addition, Caras said the broadcast media are expanding rapidly.

"We will double what we have by 1991," he said. "You can't even begin to guess what's coming at you."

"The bottom line" on wildlife reporting is reporting on wildlife accurately, Caras said. ABC goes to great lengths to make sure its stories are correct, he said, adding that with the help of a research assistant he tries to verify each of his facts with three different sources.

"Truth is our primary goal," Caras said. "Mistakes are hopefully few and far between."

Caras was on campus as part of the International Wildlife Film Festival. A self-proclaimed "life-long conservationist," Caras has written more than 50 books on wildlife and is the only major network reporter that devotes all his time to wildlife reporting.

Caras said there are not more wildlife reporters because no one perceives wildlife as news. The networks, he said, tend to hold a "man bites dog" philosophy of news coverage. Until recently, wildlife stories were feature stories and didn't merit coverage, he said.

Caras said ABC took an interest in wildlife reporting because "my boss is a real, honest-to-God animal lover."

However, at a press conference earlier yesterday, Caras said he expects more wildlife reporting in the future. People are interested in animals, he said, adding that about 80 percent of Americans own, or have owned pets and 3.5 million people visit national parks each year.

Caras' job has taken him across the globe in search of stories. He was part of the first team to film a panda in the wild.

He said the key to filming in foreign lands is getting the foreign government's support. Getting support from the Chinese to film pandas included paying a $125,000 fee plus an extra $2,000 to photograph a baby panda. "The communists can give the capitalists a lesson any day," he said.

Parking plan irks Greeks

By Melody Perkins
Kaimin Reporter

A spokesman for Theta Chi fraternity said Thursday the members of his house will agree to the proposed residential parking plan if diagonal parking near their house is exempted from the ordinance.

Members of Theta Chi, 510 University Ave., will endorse the proposed plan if the fraternity gets reserved diagonal parking on the corner of Helen and University avenues, according to Dave Sheldon, Theta Chi treasurer.

The plan, proposed by the University Homeowners Association earlier this year, would allow only residents of a two-block area on the north, south and west sides of the University of Montana campus to buy permits for on-street parking in the district. A one-year permit would cost $10.

The fraternity, among other area residents, paid for the construction of diagonal parking spaces under the terms of a Special Improvement District, a revenue-raising tax formula used by city residents to make improvements in a limited area.

Sheldon said that the SID cost the fraternity between $4,000 and $5,000, adding Theta Chi just finished its payments.

Part of the parking area is set aside for the 15 residents of the Theta Chi house. If the parking plan passes, the fraternity members will have to buy permits to park and will have to vie with other permit-holders for the parking spaces.

They don't want to buy permits, Sheldon said. Instead, the fraternity wants its parking area designated as reserved

Stress is good, author says

By Adina Lindgren
Kaimin Reporter

"Stress is what gives you the tension to hold yourself together, what gives you the energy to do something," Kim Williams, a Missoula author, told about 80 people yesterday.

Williams spoke at the first lecture in a series about stress sponsored by the University of Montana Employee Wellness Center.

Williams, who recently appeared on the David Letterman show, writes a weekly column for the Missoulian, has published four books and is nationally known for her commentaries on National Public Radio's "All Things Considered."

In her lecture, Williams said stress can be helpful but should not dominate people's lives.

"When you're working on the razor's edge, it is amazing what you can do," she said, but added, "if you come down with a cold, sometimes your body is saying, 'I've had it.'"

If that happens, Williams said, "Wallow in your cold," don't ignore it or take too much medication.

"Did you ever think that the world just might go on if you got off for a couple days?" she asked.

Williams said people should determine if their stress is short-term or long-term before they attempt to deal with it.

"It isn't always in your best interests to do" something drastic about stressful situations right away, Williams said.

"If you are alleviating your stress by taking action," she said, "all kinds of things can happen."

She said people should make a list of consequences

FORRRRRR-NI-CA-TION

You never know where God will turn up.

Take this week, for example. It's Springtime. It's warm and sunny outside. Members of both sexes are becoming increasingly scantily clad, a combination that tends to cause overworked brains to engage in a lustful thought or two.

Editorial

Then, whame! There's God right out there in mammary park (fitting location) in the form of Brother Jed and Sister Cindy, preaching about the evils of FORRRRRR-NI-CA-TION.

Now most of you might not think FORRRRRR-NI-CA-TION is evil. It might even be one of your favorite pastimes. But you're wrong, sinner. Sister Cindy told me so. She learned it from Brother Jed. (No, you perverts, she didn't learn FORRRRRR-NI-CA-TION from him. Good girls don't do things like that.) And we all know where Bro Jed gets his direction. That's right.

Straight from the man upstairs himself.

I'll bet you never thought God had the time to take an interest in your sex life. Wrong again, sinner. God knows all about it and he's against it. God doesn't let you do any of that perverted stuff. If it feels good, you better not do it. Unless, of course, you want to end up in a BURRRRR-NING PITah of FIRRARRREah.

Not only won't God let you FORRRRRR-NI-CATE, but he won't even let you give your date a kiss. "The mouth of a strange woman is a deep pit," warns Sister Cindy. And if you enter that pit, you might as well stock up on marshmallows friend because your headed for the biggest roast of all time, for all time.

As for listening to rock 'n' roll, forget it. Unless you don't want to spend eternity with the big guy, eating grapes and stuff, but would rather roast weenies. ROCK 'N' ROLL only leads to FORRRRRR-NI-CA-TION. Everyone knows that. And if you FORRRRRR-NI-CATE you know where you're going, pervert. Just ask John Lennon, Elvis Presley or Janis Joplin. They're not having a good time traipsing around on stage singing drug-inspired music anymore. They're down shoveling coal while they WEEEEEP and WAILLLL and knash their teeth. And you better watch it or you'll be down there with 'em.

Of course everyone knows the sin behind all sins. And all you whores and whoremongers do it too, don't ya. That's right. BEEEEER GUZZZZZZLING.

Guzzling beer, even the thought of beer, makes you want to listen to ROCK 'N' ROLL. And you already know where it leads.

So beer will put you on a liquid trip straight to hell. The big guy doesn't go for it, not at all. One sip is enough to piss him right off. If you drink, you've got no chance of getting even one grape. That is, unless you repent. Which brings us to the main point.

I used to be a sinner. Used to guzzle beer, listen to rock 'n' roll, enter deep pits and all that stuff. But not anymore. Not since Bro Jed and Sis Cindy showed me the light. I don't like marshmallows at all, especially roasted. I want to eat grapes.

Now that I know I want to let the big guy in to my life, I just need to know where to find him. According to Rolling Stone magazine (that heathenish purveyor of evil music), Jed found God "one day in a Burger King ('home of the ... WHOPPER!') where he met the King of Kings and was converted from a lust-ridden, drug-dealing, long-haired hippie freak to a reborn-in-the-U.S.A. Jesus freak."

As for Cindy, she says Jed and his profit friends Holy Hubert and Brother Max showed her the light one night in the parking lot of a Krystal Hamburger restaurant (not that kind of light, you perverts).

I detect a connection. God must be found in a hamburger. So from now on I'll be looking for truth from McDonalds to Hamburger Ace, hoping to find a vision in a Quarterpounder.

Why be a Fashion Plate?

In ancient oriental history, the feet of women of the aristocracy were bound in infancy to prevent growth. Tiny, delicate feet were thought to be a mark of femininity and grace. In reality, these women were crippled and suffered a great deal of pain, all in the name of fashion.

Our great-grandmothers wore corsets so tight they couldn't breathe without difficulty, let alone sit comfortably. The 'wasp-like' waist was 'in' and women suffered so they could conform to fashion's dictates.

Have you ever worn a pair of shoes with heels two inches high (or higher) for more than an hour? I have, and all I wanted to do was take them off! Feet are just not shaped like the high-heeled shoes that go in and out of fashion.

A woman does not have to be uncomfortable to look nice. A healthy diet and good personal grooming habits will go a lot further toward creating a total woman than the latest hair style or uncomfortable pair of shoes.

The key is to dress for yourself and take care of the inner you along with the outer you. Painting your face with the myriad of colors available could be fun, but should be done in moderation. You'll draw a lot more favorable attention to yourself if you look like yourself and can show that there is more between your ears than space.

Fashion is also fun, but don't try to squeeze your size 12 you-know-what into a size 10 pair of jeans and expect to be comfortable! Wear clothes that fit and watch your weight to be healthy, not to fit into someone else's idea of what you should look like.

Women of today have a lot more freedom in their choices of clothing than women did in recent history. We can wear just about anything we want to just about anywhere we want. Formal dress codes do not exist in most places as they did not more than 15 or 20 years ago. (Girls could not wear pants to West High School in Billings in 1968, the year I graduated from West.)

However, there still are fashion conventions pushed by the media and others in our lives. Certain body types are more desirable than others and large women are constantly bombarded with the idea that thinness is better. Extra weight IS dangerous to carry around, I have no argument against that, however, the danger comes from health reasons, not aesthetic ones.

Dress comfortably for yourself, take control of your life, don't cover up the real you with a lot of paint and you'll find that the real you is a viable, valuable, person that deserves to be reckoned with! Check out the Fashion Theatre (sic) Benefit sponsored by the Women's Resource Center to-night at the Front Street Theater (sic) to-night and see just how much fun fashion can be if you follow it for yourself!

Values absent

EDITOR: The President of the United States has repeatedly said he is opposed to Communist influence in Central America. He recently requested $100 million dollars to finance the Contras. If approved, this money will buy weapons to escalate the killing of one group of Nicaraguans by another group of Nicaraguans. U.S. troops, it was mentioned, are not needed to help in the killing at this time; we merely provide the "tools" so they can get on with the "job."

I'd like to suggest that this policy does not represent our values. The President's message implies that we must subvert, sabotage and destroy our enemies by more clever, more sophisticated and more effective methods than those used by our adversaries. This process is not the promise of America; it is not the best that we have to offer to the people of the world. To commit a positive evil in the present, in hope of a positive good in the future, is a grave error.

The United States is an immense reservoir of wealth in an impoverished world. Our ideals call us to use this abundance for the betterment of humanity. A hundred million spent on food, medical supplies, shelter and clothing for Nicaraguans will better serve our purposes, values and ideals. This enlightened policy would be seen as a beacon on a hill. Providing weapons will just increase the darkness.

Bible truths

EDITOR: When tempers flare, answers aren't solved. Points for or against Evangelists Jed and Cindy Smock never seemed to be answered.

The couple's tactics of Evangelism aren't the same as Christ's for spreading the Gospel and they preached with motives of condemnation instead of love like Christ taught.

Let's seek out for ourselves truths and lies that exist. It seems that many people want to make the Bible's meanings to fit their lifestyle. Others make false generalizations of Christianity because of its conservative moral views. Still others haven't really thought about it at all.

The most important commandment of the Lord is to "love others" but it shouldn't be forgotten that scripture also says, "I tell you the truth, whoever hears my words and believes him who sent me has eternal life and will not be condemned (John 5:4)." With such a harsh statement as this we can't afford to at least weigh out why or why not we accept the teachings of the Bible as lies or truth without bias opinion.

Veterans unite

EDITOR: We Vietnam Veterans fought a war for the centralized federal government, which was morally, ethically and legally questionable. That war has since been filed in the pages of history and faded into a realm which many people wish to avoid. But, the fact remains that we obeyed, we believed, and we killed in the name of the preservation of American freedom.

For many of us, the subsequent years after returning from that war have been ones of social rejection, psychological doubts and spiritual disruption. Our numbers have been decreased by a large rate of suicide and many have escaped the society for which they fought through self-imposed exile.

The ones attending the University of Montana, along with the other universities and colleges across the country, are making an honest and determined effort to pull their lives together and better themselves in the society we were supposed to have been fighting for. Yet, now the federal government is moving to take away benefits which we earned on the battlefields and in the jungles of Vietnam. The educational funds, administered under the G.I. Bill are not a privilege which we must earn, but a benefit which we have paid for with fear, tears, blood, pain and the risk of death. This is money which was promised to us in exchange for our killing the "enemies" of our country. It is part of the debt owed by the people of this country for allowing 58,000 boys to die in those rice paddies, jungles and on the rock piles of Southeast Asia.

Now, the government, in its infinite wisdom, has decided to welch on another deal, disregarding any moral aspect of principles, by decreasing these benefits, which we paid for "In Full."

We can not remain unconcerned and apathetic about this headless being, called the government. We must not stand by while struggling veterans are forced out of college and once again consigned to the lower dredges of society. We, the survivors of the Southeast Asia war, must determine a course of action which we can use to collect this debt owed to us by the very government for which we killed.

Prompt and decisive action is necessary. There are about one-hundred of us at the University of Montana and we can make a difference--if we meet Saturday, April 12th, in front of Main Hall, about 10 a.m.

Not hygienic?

EDITOR: Any woman who's glibble enough to believe Brad Burt's assertion that shaving her legs is a prerequisite for personal hygiene need only look at Brad's gorilla legs to see the warped logic in his mind. I mean mind. I didn't realize that body hair germinates infection, Dr. Burt. Your penchant for shaved legs reveals a perverse fetish that makes me wonder how many pairs of women's shoes and stockings you're hiding in your closet. Furthermore, your sexist, manly image in concert with your pencil-thin, pinheaded perspective renders your words, thoughts and life down to the level of Dr. Smith in Lost In Space--which is exactly where you seem to be operating.

P.S. I'm going down to Nicaragua soon to work on an environmental brigade designed to implement sustainable development in local communities. Such approaches are part of the Nicaraguan government's conservation strategy which rely on local labor, resources and ideas to obtain economic self-sufficiency while at the same time preserving their natural heritage. Care to join me? Oh that's right, if you go, you'll be coming home in a body bag. As Bert Pfeiffer says, "It's a battle of ideas which can't be won by military means." Remember the Nam Brad, you're a history major.

Join Spurs

EDITOR: Hey, Freshmen! Want to get involved in campus and community activities? If so, now's your chance. The University of Montana Spurs will soon be sending out applications to join our organization.

Not quite sure what Spurs are? We're a sophomore service organization that help the university and the community with many things. A few examples of what we have done this year are helping coordinate Homecoming, putting on book trade fairs, working for the Red Cross blood drawings, the Jaycees Haunted House and ushering for sports events.

This spring we will be putting on a Sadie Hawkins Dance, selecting Homecoming royalty candidates and raising money for medical equipment for infants by holding a teeter-totter marathon; all of which you would be involved in. So don't hesitate. Fill out your application and get involved!

MIA FARROW DRESSES DOWN FOR WOODY: "I'm looking for something big."

'How you gonna top that?'

Woody Allen delivers a richly comic 'Hannah'

By Tom Kipp
Kaimin Reviewer

Hannah and Her Sisters, Woody Allen's most recent attempt at purging (or at least coming to terms with) his multifarious neuroses, is probably his best work in this decade. Finally, he's confident/relaxed, enough to ACT in one of his movies rather than providing a blow-by-blow description of his own "miserable" existence.

good humor) that befit a balding comic in middle age.

Though Hannah is a fine movie (I'm giving it an A Minus for goodness' sake), a reviewer really ought to have the decency to let a rather confusing/dismal/exciting decade (the 1980s) live out its last years in relative calm before anointing its brightest cinematic light. Seems only fair, don't you think?

the benefit of a few years' perspective before putting the dread anchor of Great Art around its neck. Because, no matter how silly (offensive? dead on?!) Sarris' assertion, this film is fine stuff.

Hannah (Mia Farrow) and her sistren Lee (Barbara Hershey) and Holly (Dianne Wiest) are three gals with guy problems, philandering parents (Maureen O'Sullivan and Lloyd Nolan) and a knack for getting involved with eccentric men. They also have a big bash every Thanksgiving. In best beginning-middle-end fashion we're treated to three of these fetes, the holiday's banal constancy in stark contrast to the emotional upheavals that come in between.

Hannah's former husband Mickey Sax (Woody Allen) is a neurotic TV producer obsessed with his own mortality, so obsessed that he subjects himself to an amusingly self-deprecating gauntlet of Sex, Death and Religion. From which he finally emerges... pretty much intact.

And let's also give Hannah

Review

Of course old habits die slowest, and so Woody spends a lot of time pondering fisticuffs, but this time that's only part of the story. Because in Hannah Woody comes closer than ever to bridging the chasm between the mock hysteria in the face of human foibles that has been his predominant mood and the sort of acceptance and insight (and generous

But sometimes critics get ideas of grandeur in their capacious heads and attempt to jump the gun. Andrew Sarris (of the Village Voice, and one of our most esteemed crits) hyperbolized in this fashion recently when he proclaimed Hannah "the great American film of the 1980s." Now hype is as central to the movie industry as popcorn or cocaine by now, but howabout waiting 'til 1990 to consign the present decade to the ash heap of history?

With so many memorable faces and not quite enough glue-of-plausibility, what you end up with is a warm, carefully acted and (I must say) richly funny movie, one bound to stand among the best of the 1986.

Hannah and Her Sisters is clearly one of Woody Allen's finest achievements, more satisfying emotionally (though less of a conceptual coup) than Zelig, more intelligent and broader in scope than (the overrated) Purple Rose of Cairo, as amusing as Love and Death and, hell, probably as memorable (time will tell) as either Annie Hall or Manhattan. Which should be plenty good for right now, it seems to me. Grade: A Minus.

Crossroads
Directed by Walter Hill

Surly, arrogant movie adolescents are usually redeemed by some pleasing facet of character (vulnerability, courage, wit) that allows a viewer to sympathize. All Ralph Macchio's got is a dorky haircut and an amazing guitar teacher. Did Robert Johnson live, love and die in vain? You can be excused for wondering, if this disgracefully reductionist failure is your first exposure to the blues. This is a film that deserves to have a hellhound in its trail. Grade: C Plus.

Robert Creeley slated to read at UM Thursday

By John Kappes

Kansas Arts Editor

Distinguished American poet Robert Creeley will be in residence at the University of Montana next week, and the UM English Department has scheduled an elaborate calendar of workshops, readings and private consultations to keep him (and his admirers) busy.

Books

An early poem, "I Know a Man" (from 1960's "For Love") is reproduced on the fluorescent green and orange posters the department has pinned to nearly every bulletin board on campus. With its clipped, casual diction, striking line breaks ("... for / christ's sake, look / where yr going") and taste for abbreviation (always "sd" for "said"), it's a concise exhibit of Creeley's aesthetic, not to mention a great advertisement for the work.

Communication, he told The Paris Review in 1968, is "not a didactic process of information. ... Instead, 'if it is true that you cannot tell someone something he has no experience of, then the act of reading is that one is reading with someone'."

Creeley writes about relationships, not as an observer but as a participant, one who can hear (or respond to) what's said and felt. And if he's inclined towards "real" speech, it's not out of a sentimental belief that the overheard is somehow more "genuine." "It's just that (people) are the most insistent and most demanding and most complex presences offered to me," he said.

In fact, there's a vein of skepticism about our ability to get to the real "real" at all running through his work, a skepticism rare in a poetry of the commonplace. In "Here," for example, he writes that "No one lives in / the life of another— / no one knows."

But skepticism is not cynicism or pessimism, and Creeley allows for the measured happiness we can hack out in this life. He is a lyric poet, for all his agreeable edges. "My own life is given / me back again," he writes, "something forgotten." And: "Heal it, be / patient with / it—be quiet."

Tuesday at 4 p.m. he will

present a free public lecture on the craft of poetry in Liberal Arts 11. After private audiences on Wednesday, it's a workshop for students in the MFA program from 7 to 10 p.m. in LA 233. Thursday from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. he will consider undergraduate poetry in LA 303.

Then later on Thursday Creeley will read from his own work, published as "Collected Poems (1945-1980)" and in various journals since then. That reading is slated for 8 p.m. in Social Science 356, and may well be the finest live entertainment we'll see until Philip Glass arrives later in the month.

Track teams at home

Boise men favored

By Ken Pekoc

Kaimin Sports Editor

University of Montana men's head track and field coach Bill Leach calls the effort put forth by his team this season a "commitment to excellence" that will "sooner or later pay off."

He says the team has the potential for a Big Sky Conference championship, but isn't sure when it will make the step into contention.

Tomorrow the team has the chance to make some mighty loud footsteps.

Beginning at noon, UM, Boise State and Eastern Washington will take part in the UM Invitational track and field meet at Dornblaser Stadium.

The BSU Broncos, tabbed the Big Sky Conference's favorite to win the title, are the favorite in the meet, Leach said Thursday.

Can the Griz topple the Broncos?

"We can, but we need help," Leach said, referring to "significant breakthroughs" needed by Montana and subpar efforts by BSU.

Although he said it is "unrealistic" to think the Grizzlies will win the meet, he said he isn't counting his team out.

"We know we're going in against the odds," he said.

Key events for Montana will be the 400 meter dash, where Everett Barham and Ted Ray could each score points for the Griz.

In the long and triple jumps, both strong events for BSU, UM's Mike Ehlers could split up a possible first-second sweep by the Broncos. He also stands a good chance of scoring in the high jump.

LeRoy Foster in the 100 and Barham in the 200 are also probable placers.

Sprints key for women

By Ken Pekoc

Kaimin Sports Editor

Tomorrow's University of Montana invitational track and field meet could come down to the last event — the mile relay — before the team title is decided, according to assistant coach Jim Wharton.

Head Lady Griz coach Dick Koontz is billing the meet as one of the best Missoulians could see this year.

"If people don't see any track meets except this one, they'll be well rewarded," Koontz said yesterday.

Three teams are entered in the meet, Eastern Washington, Boise State and the Grizzlies, but both UM coaches agree the center of attention will be on Montana and Boise.

"It's going to be a close contest," Wharton said, referring to the parity throughout UM and BSU.

Like Montana, the Lady Broncos have a talented group of sprinters. In fact, the sprinters are the nucleus of both teams.

Montana's top entrants in the 100-and 200-meter dashes are Sara Robitaille, Paula Good, Kris Schmitt and Darcy Jensen.

In the hurdles, Robitaille, Schmitt, Jennifer Harlan and Beth Coomes will give the Lady Griz its best chance at scoring.

The field events are one area where Montana may surprise the Broncos.

Three Lady Griz basketball players — Sharla Muralt, Marti Leibenguth and Jean McNulty — will strengthen the team in the discus, javelin, shot put and high jump.

UM's MIKE EHLERS jumps his way to a first place finish in the triple jump last weekend. Tomorrow Ehlers and his fellow track and field teammates will host the UM Invitational beginning at noon.

The season may be over but the process goes on

By John Bates

Kaimin Reporter

All is relatively quiet in Dahlberg Arena these days.

It has been nearly a month since Mike Montgomery's University of Montana Grizzly basketball team ended its 1985-86 season.

But as springtime influences most students toward relaxing outdoor activities, it is not a time of rest for the Grizzly coaching staff or next year's players.

Facing the loss of three starters from the 1985-86 team, Montgomery and assistant coaches Stew Morrill and Bob Niehl are faced with a rebuilding process for next season.

"It's like starting over," Morrill said Tuesday.

Part of the "starting over" he referred to is taking place this spring.

On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, the Griz hoopsters play games of three-on-three and four-on-four in McGill Hall.

These workouts are followed by an hour and a half of weight lifting.

"We've got them lifting," Montgomery said. "That's the primary objective. It's a must for some of our kids to get stronger."

The playing and weight lifting will continue through the summer, with several players returning to their hometowns and participating in summer leagues.

Players frown on remaining in Missoula during the summer because they say there is a lack of competitive basketball.

So Montgomery urges them to spend their summers in areas which offer top-notch leagues so they can work on their skills.

The groundwork for next year's team actually originated five months ago when fall recruiting concluded.

The coaching staff said it had an extremely successful recruiting year and is looking forward to watching the players develop.

The following players were signed to play for the Griz next season: Mike Boken, a 6-foot-10 center from Los Angeles' Loyola High School; Kevin Harris, 6-foot-9 center from Sumner High School, Sumner, Wash.; Jeff Pelton, a 6-foot-5 swingman from Palos Verdes High School, Rancho Palos Verdes Estates, Calif.; John Reckard, a 6-foot-7 small forward from Weld Central High School, Keenesburg, Wash.; Mark Schultz, a 6-foot-8 power forward from Gonzaga Prep High School, Spokane, Wash.; and Nate Duchesne, a 6-foot-3 guard from Edmonds Community College, Edmonds, Wash.

The coaching staff plans to sign another player this spring.

"It's a real good group, especially in terms of getting some size, which we are losing," Morrill said. "They are all potentially good Big Sky players."

IWFF panel discusses films' influence

By Verina E. Palmer
Kaimin Reporter

Public opinion on wildlife issues can be swayed by the quality of wildlife films produced. Peter Steinhart, a writer for Audubon magazine said Thursday.

Steinhart spoke in a panel discussion held in the University of Montana journalism school library. Other participants included ABC News correspondent Roger Caras, World Wildlife Fund President Fatesingh Gaekwad of India, and John Sparks and Michael Kendall from the British Broadcasting Corp.

The panel discussed problems and improvements in wildlife film making and the effects of these films on the general public.

Steinhart said that for the majority of people living in big cities, their only access to wildlife is through wildlife programming on television.

Caras said these programs have improved greatly since the days of the staged Disney nature films, but there are still "appallingly bad nature films" on television in America. "Fakery is rampant," he said, and tends to mislead the public about wildlife.

The panel also discussed problems of public misinformation about wildlife that can be clarified through accurate films.

John Sparks, head of the National History Unit for the BBC, gave the example of a "great myth" that wildlife populations need to be controlled through wildlife management or hunting.

Hunters use this myth as an argument to defend their sport, he said.

Caras agreed, saying that coyotes are hunted because they have always been blamed for killing sheep and other livestock. But the claim is only "convenient poppycock when writing out income tax reports and claiming losses," he said.

Caras said the world will repair itself if people leave it alone. The only damage that can't be corrected is the extermination of a species, he said.

Also during the discussion, Gaekwad said that culture and religion have a great influence in the appreciation of wildlife.

"Traditions of animal loving have been very deep and old" in India, Gaekwad said. He said there are millions of deities in India, and each god and goddess is represented by an animal. Followers of each deity protect the species representing their gods.

Sparks added that India is one of the few developing Third World countries interested in wildlife film making.

Dean candidate favors local funding

By Kevin McRae
Kaimin Reporter

Forestry dean candidate Paul Nordstrom said in an interview with students yesterday that colleges should expect a reduction in federal funding and prepare to seek support on a local level.

Nordstrom, acting vice president of academic affairs at South Dakota State University, said if the Gramm-Rudman Law goes into effect, state and city governments will likely bear a larger burden of financing colleges.

The Gramm-Rudman Law, designed to eliminate the federal spending deficit by 1991, could result in significant cuts in federal student aid.

But local government won't be able to contribute as much money as the federal government, Nordstrom said, because it doesn't collect as much revenue from taxes.

Private businesses may ease financial problems with donations and student internships, he added, but schools will still "experience major changes" because of the Gramm-Rudman cutbacks.

The changes will have to be dealt with openly, he said, without excluding any affected students from the decision-making process.

Periods of financial difficulty are "hard on morale" of both the faculty and the students, he said, adding that it is "the greatest time for rumors and suspicion."

Communication within the forestry school should remain open between the students and faculty, he said, to prevent a "them against us" attitude from developing in times of budget and program cuts.

He warned of overreaction to press stories citing cutbacks when plans for cuts are mere speculation.

"Is the picture as gloomy as they paint it to be?" he asked.

"Instead of retreating," he said, "we should step forward aggressively" to deal with the cuts.

Nordstrom is the second of four candidates to be interviewed for the forestry dean position that opened last November.

State action saves student loans firm

By Judi Thompson
Kaimin Associate Editor

The Montana Department of Education's recent approval of a bond sale salvaged a student assistance program that helps make available more student loans to Montana residents and students at Montana colleges and universities.

The Montana Higher Education Student Assistance Corporation sold on April 1 $28.3 million in bonds, which will keep its program operating for another 18 months.

Jim Stipcich, executive director of MHESAC, explained in an interview Thursday that the corporation buys college loans from banks and other private lenders so that those lenders will have the money to invest in more loans.

Stipcich said MHESAC sold

$33.6 million in three-year bonds in 1983 and used about $30 million of that money to purchase loans.

He said the loans were to be refinanced this year, but "complications came up" that affected the loans' tax-exempt financing.

Among the complications, he said, were new financing stipulations from the Department of Education and also a piece of legislation that "shut down tax-exempt financing for the first part of the year."

Stipcich said if the State Department of Education had denied the bond sale, then MHESAC would have had to sell the loans to another bank to get cash to pay off the bonds.

He said that selling the loans would have caused MHESAC to lose credibility in the eyes of the lenders. The lenders probably would have been unwilling to sell loans, knowing that the corporation would turn around and resell them later, he said.

This year MHESAC purchased about 12,000 student loans, nearly one-third of all student loans in the state, Stipcich said.

Law panel to discuss water rights

By Adina Lindgren
Kaimin Reporter

Water rights in Montana is the topic of the eighth annual University of Montana Public Land Law Conference being held today.

The conference runs from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and will be held in the Blackfoot Room at the Village Red Lion Motor Inn.

Tamzin Brown, conference director, said organizers of the conference chose this year's topic, "Water Quality and Conservation in the '80s," because Montana courts in recent years have been changing water usage rights to deal with water shortages.

Speakers will discuss groundwater pollution, natural resource development in wetland habitats and Superfund legislation.

UM law students on the Public Land Law Review staff organized the conference, which features 12 speakers, including keynote speaker David Getches, Colorado Department of Natural Resources executive director; Albert Stone, UM law professor; and Margery Brown, acting law school dean.

Tamzin Brown said that although the conference is "geared primarily toward lawyers," it is open to the public.

"It's really nice to get other people ... aware that water is a limited resource," she said.

Admission is $75 for attorneys, $30 for the public and $15 for UM students. Lunch and a conference packet are included.

The conference is sponsored by the UM law school Public Land Law Review in cooperation with the Federal Cartridge Corporation, Student Division of the American Bar Association and the UM Student Bar Association.

Speaker cautions media

By Eric Troyer
Kaimin Reporter

American citizens should make themselves be heard by elected officials and the media if they want to find out the truth about communism, according to a former staff member of the National Security Council.

Dolf Droge, a former economic development specialist for the Agency of International Development, including stints with Presidents Lyndon Johnson's and Richard Nixon's National Security Council staffs, spoke to a group of about 40 people last night in the city council chambers at city hall.

The media, Droge said, especially the television news programs, are missing important news stories because.

•They do not catch all the lies being produced and distributed by the KGB, the Soviet secret police and intelligence agency.

•Journalism schools are teaching students that journalists can attain fame by investigating the United States government, such as from the "Watergate" case.

•The American education system is giving students misleading and wrong information about American foreign policy.

As an example Droge cited documentation found in Grenada after the U.S. invasion that identified American Army M-16 rifles, captured in Vietnam after the Americans fled, as the same that were given to El Salvadoran rebels by Cuban leader Fidel Castro.

Another example Droge used was that Nicaraguan president Daniel Ortega has invited terrorist groups to use Nicaragua as a "launching pad" into the United States.

Neither story has been adequately covered by the national television news programs, he said.

The media then miss other important news stories because they don't want to contradict themselves and they don't want to be banned from interviews with foreign political leaders.

Citizens should write to sponsors of news broadcasts and ask that they not support news that is not complete and correct, he said.

"The fourth branch of government (the news media) has to be checked and balanced, not suppressed," he said.

Also, anchormen on news programs should denounce other news programs and their anchormen for not properly covering a story and then should present the whole story, Droge said.

"That's not attacking Dan Rather. That's being competitive in journalism," he said.

Correction

The Kaimin yesterday erroneously reported that Glen Williams is the UM vice president of "physical affairs."

While the Kaimin realizes Williams may enjoy hiking, jogging and an occasional round of golf, these are merely hobbies, not official duties.

Williams is actually UM vice president of "fiscal affairs." The Kaimin regrets the error.

Of course, it is debatable as to which position would be more fun.

Droge also urged audience members to write their congressmen once a month pointing out incorrect votes and praising correct votes and good work.

"That's what democracy is," he said.

Parking

for members only.

But City Council Alderwoman Donna Shaffer said Thursday that she didn't think the fraternity had "much of a chance" of getting reserved parking. Shaffer is the chairwoman of the Public Safety Committee.

The parking spaces are part of the public right-of-way and owned by the city, she said.

Sheldon said that Theta Chi will send representatives to the April 28 public hearing on the parking district.

"We are in a unique situation," he said, "and the homeowners should realize this."

One other fraternity and a sorority will also be affected by the proposed parking plan, but have not developed any clear cut policies opposing the plan.

Although Delta Gamma, 516 University Ave., has 36 live-in members and only four off-street parking places, it doesn't actively oppose the district, Tamara Frey, the sorority's vice president said Thursday.

"We're kind of neutral on it," she said.

Brad Love, social chairman of Phi Delta Theta fraternity, 500 University Ave., said fraternity members "don't really want to pay for" permits, but they haven't organized against the parking district.

Grant Davidson, advisor to the Interfraternity Council, said he thinks most of the fraternities and sororities would prefer to "keep things the way they are."

He said that if the plan is approved, the real problem will occur when commuter traffic moves onto the UM campus or into the residential area west of the district.

Mary McLeod, ASUM vice president, said student government will oppose the plan because it "places the burden of parking costs back on the students."

Williams

before they take action, or they should wait.

"You have to say to yourself, 'Can I endure?' or 'I can endure!'" Williams said.

"There are things you can endure," Williams told her audience. "Endurance may not be a word that's in fashion right now, but it may be" later.

She said physical abuse is one thing not to endure. She told women to terminate abusive relationships.

"If he breaks your arm, shoot him," she said jokingly.

"I can assure you if you live in Montana, you won't be in jail very long."

Williams suggested a "three-legged stool approach" to avoid stress: moderation in dieting, exercise and stress management.

"Don't be a fanatic about diet," she said. "You could live on bean sprouts from noon to midnight, but it won't get you to heaven and it won't relieve stress. 'Thin, thin, thinner is a lot of baloney."

She said the second part of her theory, exercise, can become an obsession or can drain people of energy to spend for the community.

"You gotta stand on this three-legged stool," she said. "You don't have to be the stool."
